

Lizet Isabel Garcia

Professor Sapozhnikov

English 102

02 may 2024

The Impact of Low-Income Status on Future Opportunities: A visual Argument

Does Being a low-income student affect your future? Well the author of this presentation name is Lizet Garcia. she is majoring in business at cal state east bay. During her presentation she expressed her passion why people should understand Why being low income affects your future. She used ethos, pathos ,and logos to strengthen her presentation to have the audience understand what are the struggles Of being a low-income student and how that affects their future. and for lizet garcia to To use the rhetorical appeals to support her claim which was that being a low-income Affects a person's childhood because of their surroundings and can affect their future.

The author Lizet Garcia used logos to further her point. By doing this she used a graph that represented how much money that the kansas public school lost due To paying the property tax. and that resulted to budget cuts to equipment for playgrounds, course materials ,and non-qualified teachers. and that can lead low-income Students fall behind those kids who have better access. For an example due to the very limited resources people who are low-income test lower than people who have better access. the author brought this two examples so they can have the audience to Understand why having limited resources can have a effect on your success. and she used the logos for the views to understand better,

Then the presenter also used pathos in her presentation to sway the audience to agree with her. she used her personal experience to have an connection to the presentation and show this to the audience. she brought up the fact that her parents don't pay for her education. so therefore she has to work a full time to support herself throughout college. and that mean she doesn't have time study or to do homework like some of her peers. even though she gets government help to pay for her education, its still not enough. and overall this made it relatable to the presentation and have The viewers understand the slides better.

Her little behind her peers..but doing that she made the audience feel moved of her statement. because it's not easy to to do both. and she using that so she can have a Further understanding of the situation.

The author used ethos further and have the audience to understand and have a trusted source for this information. she used creditedable websites. like the havarada gazzette, the circle, an the conservation in her presenation. this supported the evidence in her project becasue it showed the evidence wasn't made up or fake. and the eveidence is actually has been reseached and had show the negative impacts that she was speaking about. beacsue for an example she used an example of low-income students are likely have lowe score on the sats then people who have extra resoyrces then them. and that has been research by people who study about how being low-income affects yours education. overall she she used ethos effectively and having the audience understanding why being low-income has effect in your education.

Overall in her presentation the author lizet Garcia used the rhetorical appeals for them to support her claim. which was that being low-income effect that way you grow and that could lead the way to be successful. the use of logos was useful because she she used graphs and data that could have any relevance her study. which was affected in her slides/. and the show follow that she pathos so she evoke a emotion for the audience to have a emotional reponse . . and then she used kairos so the audience can have the research to be updated and be trust the research that is its all currently updated to this era of time. with the allth erhetorical appeasl she used for this preseantion was good but could use some work. if the presenation lacks a lttle bit of organaztion with using the appeals. so if she organized it a little a bit better the presenation can have a better understanding why being low-income affects your future.